Summer II:

Sociology 364: The Impacts of Globalization

What is globalization? How does it impact our lives in the US and peoples’ lives in different parts of the worlds? Is globalization restricted only to economic field, or is it a multidimensional process affecting culture, politics and even our sense of self? Why is there so much opposition to globalization in the US and other parts of the world?

These are some of the questions we will explore in this course. We will try to understand globalization as a multidimensional process simultaneously yet unevenly taking place in economic, political and cultural realms. Our readings will be supported by documentaries examining different impacts of globalization around the world.

This course will help you develop a strong theoretical and empirical background in the sociological investigation of globalization and prepare you for an increasingly globalizing world.
